Stiofan Mac Suibhne

Osteopath

Sydney, NSW

Stiofán graduated from the London School of Osteopathy in 2001. He offers individual ergonomic assessment for the prevention and management of injuries, and delivers group training in manual handling and train-the-trainer ergonomic programmes.

He has a master's degree in rehabilitation with a focus on neuroscience education and behavioural medicine, and has a particular interest in the prevention and management of pain. Stiofán has 20 years of experience in occupational health, injury prevention & rehabilitation in the UK public health system and in private practice in Australia. He practises part-time in a GP practice in Sydney and is a co-founder of AmelioHealth, a health tech company that delivers pain management and behavioural medicine programmes to injured workers on return to work programmes.

CWHA Testimonials

"Awesome Manual Handling Training session conducted at our workshop! The training was customised to suit our business and contained a good mix of theory/practical elements. Highly recommended. Thanks again."

"The inner-city business for whom I work as Office Administrator recently engaged CWHA to deliver "Sit Safe" training seminars and conduct ergonomic assessments for all our staff. It was a very worthwhile undertaking. The information imparted in the seminars was interesting and applicable. The individual desk checks were thorough and valuable, as was the subsequent comprehensive report."

"Reps of Corporate Work Health are great at customer service and their responses are prompt and quick. Very accommodating to clients needs and always going above and beyond to find a solution for me and to find a date and time of consultation. Highly recommend them to use for your Ergonomic work health assessments including work from home assessments."
